An Availability Zone is a physically separate zone, within an Azure region.

I think this is wrong - a region has up to three availability zones, each availability zone is in a datacentre. The question asks about an availability zone - i.e. singular - so it should be datacenter not region.

No, you are wrong because availability zone itself consists of one of more Data centers, so B is correct.

Actually, each availability zone can have three datacenters inside it, so the AZ is a container of datacenters.

multiple datacenters (not only three) can be inside one availability zone. Three AZs can be inside one region.
