1) I couldn't quite find a statement from MS that it's true for MOST of the service: <https://azure.microsoft.com/en-gb/support/legal/preview-supplemental-terms/> However, that seems to be the lifecycle <https://www.techielass.com/service-lifecycle>

2) No - Also from the Portal (marked as "preview")

3) No - it might be free or cheaper during the preview, but definitely not when GA

<https://azure.microsoft.com/en-gb/updates/?status=inpreview> There aren't many services that has a link to sign up to the private review.. So I guess the first question is No on the MOST word

If this question first choice has no "most" word, it will be no

Therefore, yes no no

From M365, but I'd guess it's true for Azure as well

<https://docs.microsoft.com/en-us/learn/modules/describe-service-life-cycle-microsoft-365/2-private-public-general-availability>

A product, or services, lifecycle typically has three phases:

Private preview

Public preview

General Availability (GA)

It's No, No, No.

Microsoft does not have to release Azure service in Private preview before being introduced to public. It depends on what is the type of feedback Microsoft wants to get back for a particular service.

  DeveshSolanki 4 years, 6 months ago

Correct Answer is Y N N

for point 1 : This does not have to be case for each service. It depends on what is the type of feedback Microsoft wants to get back for a particular service.
