The correct answer is not given here, as MS states: "Azure Germany is available to eligible customers and partners globally who intend to do business in the EU/EFTA, including the United Kingdom."

UK not for long, though :) That's mostly around GDPR and other regulatory compliance. Germany is part the EU, so most of them are the same also for other EU countries, other more sensitive might not be allowed to leave the country. In any way, your comment is correct, as is the answer

For those always complaining about the underlined text, there is nothing underlined to see, the statement is what it is in the question. I think the question is again by most misunderstood. D is correct, anyone can chose and use Germany if they want

Azure Germany documentation

Azure Germany is a physically isolated instance of Microsoft Azure that uses world-class security and compliance services that are critical to German data privacy regulations. Since August 2018, we have not been accepting new customers or deploying any new features and services into the original Microsoft Cloud Germany locations. Based on the evolution in customers' needs, we recently launched two new datacenter regions in Germany, offering customer data residency, full connectivity to Microsoft's global cloud network, as well as market competitive pricing.

This is because of two new data centers in Germany, and hence MS is asking customers to complete migration by a certain date in 2021
