An Azure Service Level Agreement (SLA) is a commitment by Microsoft to provide a certain level of service availability for a specific Azure service. The SLA for virtual machines guarantees a certain level of uptime for the virtual machine instance. Specifically, it guarantees at least 99.95% availability per month for virtual machines running on a single instance, and 99.99% availability per month for virtual machines running on two or more instances.

No, it's uptime. It says so in the first line of the webpage you're referring to:

"The Service Level Agreements (SLA) describe Microsoft's commitments for uptime and connectivity for Microsoft Online Services."
