From the Azure portal, you can distinguish between services that are generally available and services that are in public preview.	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
After an Azure service becomes generally available, the service is no longer updated with new features.	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
When you create Azure resources for a service in public preview, you must recreate the resources once the service becomes generally available.	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>

Had that question on (26.02.23). The following questions were included and even a mixture of them. I may repeat a question, but they are repeated here as well. Good luck all.

Public preview – During this phase we allow any customer with the proper Azure AD license to evaluate the new feature. Microsoft Customer Support Services will supply support services during this phase, but normal service level agreements do not apply. For new features exposed in the Azure AD Portal, customer can expect to see information banners in the user interface that draw attention to the new experience available during the preview. By clicking on the information banner customers then opt-in to the preview experience.

When a service becomes generally available, Microsoft can still add new features. Think of it as updates
When you create Azure resources for a svc in public preview and then it becomes generally available you can still maintain the resources you first put in public preview. Its not like is going to be reset just bc it went to generally available. The whole idea of it is to test those "previews" to introduce them on our daily resources

Don't have the source but I see it more as logical
