In fact, I just asked Microsoft CoPilot which was developed using OpenAI ChatGPT and it says, yes, you can assign the owner role to multiple users in a resource group

correct answer is YYY

Yes, in Azure, a resource group can have the Owner role assigned to multiple users. The Owner role is a built-in role in Azure that provides full access to all resources in a resource group, including the ability to create, modify, and delete resources.

When you assign the Owner role to a user or group, it grants them full access to all resources within the resource group. Multiple users or groups can be assigned the Owner role for a resource group, which allows for collaboration and delegation of responsibilities among different teams or individuals.

It's important to note that assigning the Owner role to multiple users or groups can increase the risk of accidental or intentional changes to resources within the resource group. Therefore, it's recommended to carefully consider the access needs of each user or group and assign roles accordingly to minimize the risk of unauthorized access or accidental changes.

Had that question on (26.02.23). The following questions were included and even a mixture of them. I may repeat a question, but they are repeated here as well. Good luck all.

A Resource Group can have many owners. I verified this in the Access control (IAM) of the RG.

A resource group can have the owner role assigned to multiple users. The owner role provides full access to manage and make changes to the resources within the resource group, including the ability to assign roles to other users and manage access to the resources. So, it is possible to assign the owner role to multiple users, allowing them to manage and make changes to the resources within the resource group.

This can be useful in scenarios where multiple users need the ability to manage and make changes to the resources in the resource group. It allows you to share the management of the resource group and delegate access to different users or teams.
