C
A content delivery network (CDN) is a global network of servers that are designed to deliver content, such as web pages, images, and videos, more efficiently to users. CDNs work by caching content at locations around the world and serving it from the location that is closest to the user. This can significantly improve the performance and speed of delivering content to users, especially for large video files.

A Content Delivery Network (CDN) is a geographically distributed network of servers and their data centers that help in content distribution to users with minimal delay.

It does this by bringing the content closer to the geographical location of users through strategically located data centres called Points of Presence (PoPs).
